

Couples to be able to ‘Tie the Knot’ over Zoom

That is to be the position in New York after Governor Andrew Cuomo announced on 18 April 2020 that he had signed an Executive Order allowing New Yorkers to obtain marriage licences remotely and authorising clerks to perform ceremonies via video conference.

Similar measures have also been introduced in Colorado where couples are being allowed to apply for marriage licences online and one county in Ohio which is making it possible in certain circumstances, such as where one of the partners is a health care worker or suffers from a serious illness.

It is not just the US. The UAE recently announced that citizens and residents would be able to get married online with virtual ceremonies able to take place once required documents have been lodged online.

Although it is not possible to get married by such methods in England, marriages conducted by video link in other countries would likely be recognised in England provided three conditions are met:

- First, the marriage must comply with the formalities of the law of the country in which it takes place.
- Second, the couple getting married must have the legal capacity to get married in accordance with the law of the country of their domicile immediately before the marriage.
- Third, the marriage must not be contrary to English public policy. It is highly unlikely as a matter of public policy that England would refuse to recognise marriages from friendly jurisdictions through a law entered into recognising distinctive circumstances preventing conventional weddings and where all of the other requisites of marriage are satisfied.

If you would like to discuss whether your marriage is likely to be recognized, you can contact Michael Allum below:

Michael Allum

Michael.Allum@iflg.uk.com

The International Family Law Group LLP

www.iflg.uk.com

© April 2020